Asta Emilia Levy

Pop/jazz singing lecturer at Metropolia University of Applied Sciences (since 2022), with extensive experience in music pedagogy, choir and ensemble conducting, project management, and music event production. Previously, I have worked as a music teacher and coach in various institutions, developed curriculum content, and collaborated widely as a musician, arranger, and artistic director. I hold a master's degree in music education (Sibelius Academy, 2015) and have been involved in both national and international music projects, publications, and professional networks.

I am an experienced lecturer in pop/jazz singing, music pedagogy, and choir conducting, with a broad background in teaching, group leadership, project management, and music event production.
I have worked both in educational institutions and as an independent entrepreneur, developing course content and participating in various musical projects and publications.
My core strengths include comprehensive voice coaching, improvisation, music pedagogy development, and inspiring and engaging group leadership.
